Architectural Models and Drawings at the Metropolitan in February and March

Perspective on the Exhibitions

By HELEN L. KOHEN
Special to The Herald

The optimism we projected for the new decade in this space last year has taken on a tint of tarnish, but it is still intact. The art schedule is full enough and promises more really fine offerings than ever. But we were wrong about some things, and need to adjust our enthusiasms accordingly.

The museum situation is once again (or still) vulnerable. Though the proposed Center for the Fine Arts is under way, the new building for the Museum of Art in Fort Lauderdale has gone back to the drawing board. There is, also, good news and bad news at the Bass Museum. For everyone's good is the fact that it reopened and adds not only a collection, but exhibition space, to the community. The bad becomes obvious on careful analysis of the schedule, to which the museum contributes two weak entries. In addition, this season marks the fifth in a row that finds the Metropolitan Museum and Art Centers in a holding pattern.

STILL, THOSE that can, do. Among the best of the coming museum shows, look for

Rogelio Pretto Miniatures

Amaral's 'Bamboo and Being'

We will be twice blessed with two others, Audrey Flack at both the Art and Culture Center of Hollywood (February) and Florida International University (April), and Sol LeWitt at Gloria Luria Gallery and at Miami-Dade Community College South Campus in January.

PHOTOGRAPHY IS everywhere on the calendar. The best of the lot should include the Alfred Stieglitz show at Florida International University, through this month, Les Krims at Wm. M. Lyons Gallery in March, Judy Dater and Jerry Uelsmann at Gallery Exposures the same month, and Hard Times, from the Farm Security Administration survey, in May at Miami-Dade Community College New World Center Campus. And, in a category all by itself, an architectural exhibition from New York's Museum of Modern Art, Six Buildings for Best Products, will be shown at the Metropolitan Museum and Art Centers in February.

By keeping a careful check on your white wine consumption, you should be able to see them all.
